TOPICS FOR TODAY

1. Author Identifiers
2. Institutional affiliation
3. Institutional addresses

1. Author Identifiers

Author Identifiers

In today's crowded scholarly publishing scene mix-ups with similarly-named authors, variants or name changes can easily happen. Persistent identifiers help you claim your identity and distinguish you from others

Author Identifiers

Are important because:

- It reduces author ambiguity
- It helps to manage career changes
- It supports administrative efficiency
- It improves the research impact
- It promotes networking and collaboration

Distinguish Yourself

Author Identifiers

Most common identifiers are:

	ORCID	Scopus	RESEARCHERID
Biographic details: updating	Manual	By request to Scopus	Manual
Publication list: loading/updating	Automatic/Manual import options	Automatic (checking required)	Manual
Cross-referencing with other identifiers	Yes	ORCID	ORCID
Citation metrics	No	Yes	Yes
Social media links	Yes	No	No

Author Identifiers

1. ORCID – fully interoperable with PURE and Scopus Author ID.
  2. ResearcherID – is connected with the database Web of Science (WoS). The author must have at least one publication in the Web of Science database in order to have ResearcherID.
  3. Scopus Author ID – is created automatically when there is at least one publication in the Scopus database. Publications are linked to the author's name automatically.
- Due to the various forms of author's names, one author can have more Scopus Author ID.

AND...

Bom dia Teresa, tudo bem?

Chegou-nos este artigo do [redacted] que faz parte do grupo do Professor [redacted] e é investigador clínico no Hospital [redacted]

[redacted] da faculdade porque é um estudo com grande impacto e o nosso investigador é primeiro autor. Mas... não tem a afiliação correta, só colocou [redacted] e não colocou NMS.

Nós podemos assumir que este artigo também é da NMS tendo em conta que ele faz investigação num grupo nosso ou não podemos “reivindicar” este estudo como nosso?

Obrigado e até já,
